PARTICLE CONTROL USING A PATH

ABSTRACT

A method of modeling a particle system composed of particles having attributes includes receiving a definition of a particle path, modifying at least one attribute of a particle based on a distance between the particle and the particle path, and rendering the particles. The method may also include receiving particle attribute information and generating a set of attributes based on the particle attribute information.